

From Kipling, Queen, Warden, Finch, a moment in the life of 69 subway riders

HARRISON SMITH/TORONTO STAR

Wednesday January 5, 2005 is more than just the day Toronto visual artist Michael Brown, 39, took a 10-hour trip on the TTC, visiting every subway station in the city. It's also the name of a work of art consisting of the 69 transfers he acquired on his journey, complete with pencil sketches of fellow subway passengers. The artwork is now on display at the King subway station, Melinda St. exit, until early September. Brown's work is part of a series of events planned at various stations this summer.
